FACTORY PROMOTER AND WIFE ARRESTED

Italian Who Tried to Sell Stock in Douglas Gets Into Trouble.

Douglas, Arizona, June 21 .- W. L. Bessolo, an Italian, who was in Douglas several weeks ago endeavoring to sell stock in an alleged tool factory he was to erect in San Diego, Cal, with the promise of a fine residence lot in the scaport town with each 500 shares, has been arrested. U. S. attorney J. E. Morrison caused the arrest of Bessolo, his wife and L. C. Rice. All are charged with using the mails to defraud. Rice was kept under surveillance for several days, it is said, following the arrest of Mr. and Mrs. Bessolo. It was deemed best to have the preliminary hearings of all three at the same time. Mr. Morrison therefore wired the government agents at Los Angeles to place

A Tunnel Four Miles Long Carries it Into Another Valley for Irrigation.

GIANT RECLAMATION PROJECT IN UTAH

ONE OF THE GREATEST RECLAMATION PROJECTS. Pierces mountain for almost four miles.

Diverts entire river from one valley to another 45 miles away. Reclaims area of 60,000 acres in Utah.

Called for solution of difficult engineering problems and great physical endurance.

In snow and cold, at one and one-half miles above sea level, workers have dug 14 hours a day
for more than two years.

Washington, D. C., June 21 .- "Holed brough today," This was the laconic message relayed. by telephone from Camp Quinton in the Wasatch mountains, Utah, and flashed by wire today to the reclamation service here. It marked the completion of the Strawberry tunnel, one of the largest and most difficult pieces of engineering work the reclamation service ever has been called upon to undertake.

With one exception this underground with one exception this underground waterway tunnel is the largest in the world. Many hard engineering problems had to be overcome in planning it; and great physical endurance was required of the men who carried out the work.

Carries River Under Mountain.

The tunnel pierch's the solid rock of one of the highest peaks of the Wasatch mountains at a point where those eternal hills are more than 20,000 feet through. It will move a good sized stream, the Strawberry river, from one drainage basin to another, 45 miles away. Only 2000 feet below the snow capped crest of the mountains the tunnel has pierced its rocky way.

To the south and east of Utah lake, in one of the most beautiful valleys in the west, are 60,000 acres of exceedingly fertile land, now only partially productive for lack of water. To transform this valley to a rural settlement, dotted with thriving towns and villages and barred with long rows of fruit trees, the government engineers have overcome almost unheard of obstacles.

Tunnel Four Miles Long.

Beyond the Wasatch range which rims the valley's eastern border, Strawberry river, for centuries bank full, perhaps, has run uselessly by, its waters finally reaching the Gulf of Callfornia through the Colorado river. To divert this water from the Colorado drainage basin and turn it into the Utah valley, the enormous Strawberry tunnel nearly four miles long, has been bored through the Wasatch mountains, its cross section measures more than 60 square feet. It is walled and buttressed with timber and lined with cement.

A telephone line 38 miles long, extending from Spanish Fork to both portals of the tunnel was constructed, and a wagon road from Diamond switch, the shipping point on the Denver & Rio Grande railroad, to both portals 33 miles long was made Down in the foothills a diversion dam was thrown across Spanish Fork river and water turned into a power canal three and one-half miles long, which dropped them through huge pipes on the big turbines 100 feet below. Power thus generated was transmitted electrically to the tunnel site, where it was used to turn the diamond drills in the took, to light the camps and run the heavy machinery. The surplus has been sold to towns in the valley for municipal and commercial purposes.

The camps are located a mile and a half above sea level, and during several months each winter have practically been isolated from the world, the roads blocked by masses of snow and ice. For more than two years the work has gone on without ceasing, three shifts of men alternating during the 24 hours of the day and night. Thousands of gallons of water, poisonous gases, and swelling ground have made the work difficult and dangerous. The men fled for their lives on several occasions.

In 1910 the work of placing the concrete lining was begun and since has been carried on simultaneously with the excavation of the heading. This required swilful handling of men and material to avoid delay in either feature of the work. Notwithstanding the difficulties of the undertaking it has been carried to completion without the loss of a single life.

Beyond the tunnel, in the shadow of the granite peaks, a great peservoir is being built. A retaining dam of rock, cement and steel is being built so deep that a six story building might be hidden behind it. Fed by melting snows, the waters will rise behind this structure, covering $200 acres with 278,-800 acre feet of water.

The valley to be irrigated is especially interesting because it is the scene of the earliest irrigation by Angio-Saxons in the west. Settled by Brigham Young and his followers in 1847, after their march through more than a thousand miles of unknown territory peopled by savages, it is the oldest example of community farming by an English speaking people in the west. For protection against the indians the farmers lived in little towns throughout the valley, their houses built close together and facing a community houses are still standing. The original farms were for the most part not more than 40 or 50 acres in size, which may account to some extent for the early success of agriculture under extreme difficult conditions.

When the storage and distribution system is finished and an ample waier supply assured for all time, the valley will support more than a thousand farm homes. Salt Lake City and the nearby mining camps will furnish a home market for many of the products, and three railroad lines which traverse the irrigable area, will furnish unusual transportation facilities to the outside world.
